

How We Resist

an exploration of resistance and resilience

The elections have generated a fair amount of fear, concern, grief, anger, confusion...

The rhetoric of the campaign, and since, suggests that some of our neighbors, and some of our most basic values are going to be under attack in the coming months and years. As people of faith, and people who care for justice, it seems safe to assume that we are going to be called to resist like never before. Following up to these asks will require us to deepen our resilience (both individually and collectively).

Come to this initial conversation where we will explore the connection between resilience and resistance, recognize and acknowledge the multitude of ways we are already engaging in resistance, and strengthen our connections in order to sustain our resistance efforts.

Sunday January 19, 2025

9:30am to 10:45am

at All Peoples Congregation

(4934 Brownsboro Road)

This is a free event and no registration is required.

For more information, contact justicecenter@allpeoplesuu.com.

The Justice Center is an initiative of all Peoples Unitarian Universalist Congregation and works to engage our congregation and the broader community in developing efforts for meaningful justice activism and advocacy.